Victor Hugo Green

(1892-1960)

Born in Manhattan and raised in Hackensack, New Jersey, was the visionary behind this guide. After marrying Alma Duke and moving to Harlem, Green recognized the travel challenges faced by African-Americans amidst widespread racial segregation. His innovation was to compile "The Negro Motorist Green Book" in 1936, which initially focused on New York City before expanding nationwide. Green leveraged his postal network and reader feedback to list black-owned or non-discriminatory establishments, providing a safe travel network during the Jim Crow era when "Sundown Towns" and segregation laws were prevalent.

Discover the Green Book in the film "The Musicians' Green Book," a historical documentary featuring artists who relied on it for safe travel on the Chitlin' Circuit.

Why The Green Book was needed?

1. Threat of Violence
 - Legalized Segregation: Southern states enacted laws enforcing racial segregation in public facilities, transportation, schools, and businesses. These laws denied Black Americans access to many essential services, making travel perilous.
 - "Separate but Equal" Doctrine (1896): The Supreme Court's Plessy v. Ferguson decision upheld segregation laws, intensifying institutionalized discrimination across the country.

MUSICIANS' ENDURING LEGACY ORGANIZATION

MELO is actively seeking funding partners to bring the transformative power of the Green Book Exhibit to communities across the nation, while also fueling our next groundbreaking project: a music documentary on the life of Earl Palmer, the drummer whose innovative beats defined 20th-century music. Unlike The Musicians' Green Book's broad exploration of Black performers navigating Jim Crow segregation, this film intimately chronicles one extraordinary figure (born in New Orleans, tap-dancing on the Black vaudeville "Chitlin' Circuit" by age five, serving in the segregated Army during World War II, and later using the G.I. Bill to become the go-to session drummer for icons like Little Richard, Fats Domino, Sam Cooke, Frank Sinatra, Ray Charles, and The Beach Boys). His rhythms powered TV and film soundtracks for The Flintstones, Green Acres, and Mission: Impossible, among others (making his story a profound study in resilience and Americana).

As a nonprofit dedicated to preserving and amplifying these vital narratives, we're looking for visionary sponsors, foundations, and corporations who share our commitment to cultural education and equity. Your support (whether through grants, sponsorships, or in-kind contributions) will fuel exhibit expansions, Road Show tours, digital outreach initiatives, and this captivating Palmer documentary, touching thousands of lives and fostering meaningful dialogues on history and heritage. Join us in this vital mission: contact development@MELOmusic.org today to discuss partnership opportunities and become a champion for stories that demand to be heard. Together, we can illuminate the past to inspire a brighter, more inclusive tomorrow.

A Message From Our Founder

I was just musing on what a monumental power and influence music exerts on humanity as a whole, but we don't seem to honor or recognize its importance in the fabric of our everyday lives...

It's taken for granted...

As is air and water and love and all the things that we cannot live without.

It is in the background and forefront of every breath we take...
From the lullaby to the funeral dirge.
